"Discussing the Outlook for Diplomacy and Security Policy under the Second Trump Administration"

The Japan Institute of International Affairs (JIIA) is pleased to announce that Paul J. Saunders (President, Center for the National Interest), Fumiaki Kubo (President, National Defense of Academy, Japan), and Ryo Sahashi (Associate Professor, The University of Tokyo) will be joining us for a JIIA Forum to analyze the US presidential election and consider its likely consequences.

The forum will examine the prospects for US foreign and security policy in the second Trump administration following the 2024 US presidential election, focusing on US-Russia relations and US-China relations, which are Mr. Saunders' areas of expertise, while also touching on US-Japan relations and offering predictions on the makeup of the new administration's diplomatic and security teams.

Amidst growing uncertainty in international affairs – as manifested in the US-China strategic competition, Russia and China's growing proximity, the protracted war in Ukraine, and the increasingly chaotic situation in the Middle East – How will President-elect Trump, who is scheduled to take office in January 2025, lead the United States as a superpower and exercise leadership in the international community? The panelists will discuss in depth the formation of the second Trump administration and various aspects of diplomacy and national security.
